RUSSIAN PRESS ADOPTS MARKED CHANGE IN TONE

Now Regretting Ill Feeling in America, Instead of Fanning Animosity Flames.

COMMENTS

ST. PETERSBURG, March 4.- The Russian press halls with great satisfaction the American dispatches of the last few days as indicating a change in the disposition of the Washington government toward Rusria. The Bourse Gazette and the Novoe Vremya this morning discuss in a soberminded fashion Russo-American relations and the danger of a permanent estrange-

The Gazette says: "There is something profoundly regrettable in the present relations between these two world powers. They transcend the bounds of common logic. The position taken by America since last June and the anti-Russian newspaper campaign in the United States are so inexplicable that they seem like a nightmare. Since the beginning of its history, America has inspired the liveliest feelings of friendship and admiration among Russians and diplomatic and political expressions of these feelings have been continuous and constant. In Russian social circles there has ever been a veritable worship of the classic land of liberty and the Americans have always heretofore made Russian friendship the cornerstone of their foreign policy. Suddenly, as if an evil spirit had broken loose, the Americans, despite their practical turn of mind, began to do everything to stimulate Japanese aggressiveness, and seem now to be anxiously awaiting Japanese victories in Asia, where important American commercial interests are centered. As a matter of fact hostility between the United States and Russia would be as great a misfortune to civilization in the twentieth century as was the rivalry between France and Germany in the nineteenth. The duty of every rightminded man is to arrest the growth of this animosity. Russian diplomacy owes it to the Americans and to the whole civilized world to do its utmost. We are not called upon to re-echo hostile sounds coming from be yond the Atlantic because unfriendly sentiments do not exist among us. The latest advices permit the belief that it will be much easier to remove the misunderstand ing than the enemies of Russia may think The Novoe Vremya says it does not know whether the Washington Cabinet influenced such incidents as the gift of $10,000 by Charles R. Crane, of Chicago, to the Young Czarina's fund for Russian soldiers and sailors, the pro-Russian Irish demonstration to New York and the quieter tone of the British press, but the paper believes it notes an important change in American official tactics, beginning with a disinclination to favor the Japanese cable project, followed by the report of Secretary Hay's dissatisfaction with the anti-Russian press campaign. which disposition was further proved by his not insisting on dispatching United States consuls to Antung and Mukden at this time, which quite agrees with President Roosevelt's decision to allow Mr. Morgan (appointed United States consul at Port Dainy) to remain at home for the present and not to send the battleship Kentucky to the scene of the hostilities in the far East. The paper adds: 'We are certain that this change is as agrecable to the Americans as it is to us. The antagonism of Washington distressed but did not frighten us, nor things could not come to a rupture, as prudence must end always in dominating impulses, there being no good reason for a war. The practical Yankees must realize that the telegram of the American consul at Moscow to Chicago to the effect that American business in Russia was suffering by reason of the anti-Russian feeling said to exist in the United States, illustrated the feelings not only of the Moscow merchants. but of all branches of Russian trade. What he predicted happened in the case of England after the Crimean war. Germany stepped into the British shoes. In conclusion, the Novoe Vremya says: "All is well that ends well. If the light, cool feeling which has been hanging over Washington is dispelled and the Japanese Would Gain No Great Military Advantage in Seizing Russia's Naval Base.

WHITE GIVES HIS VIEWS

CHICAGO, March 4.-In an address before the Chicago Press Club on the Russo-Japanese war, Mr. Trumbull White, the wellknown foreign correspondent and author to-night predicted that with the advance of the season and the extended military operations, the movement of the Japanese against Port Arthur would lose its relative importance. Mr. White illustrated his address with a large number of views made from his own photographs of Siberia, Manchuria and Korea. He said in part:

the Japanese against Port Arthur to be of such vital importance in the outcome of the war as it is generally estimated to be. Of course, the fall of Port Arthur would be a distinct blow to Russian prestige, and a corresponding gain to the Japanese cause. Nevertheless, the effect would be largely sentimental. It may be suggested that the fall of Port Arthur would give the Japanese another naval base, and that by the elimination of the Russian fleet at Port Arthur the islanders would be able to shift their transports at will and make landings wherever they chose. To all appearances, however, they have that condition in effect, now. It is true that the capture of this southern terminal of the Siberian railway would give the Japanese a line of advance northward into Manchuria. But it is equally certain that they would be advancing to the very place where the Russians are best prepared and most anxious to meet them, military force. I believe it will appear a years to come. little later that the assault on Port Arthur was intended largely for its sentimental effect, and to distract Russian attention from much more important movements in northern Korea along the Yalu river and northeastward toward Vladivostok.

"The Russians are claiming world sympathy because they are a Christian nation fighting against a heathen. I do not consider the position well taken. It is true that the | This action is reported to have occurred Russians are among the most religious of people, but I was unable to discover in any part of Russia, Asiatic or European, that the religious system in force had any vistbie effect, good or bad, on the intellectual moral or spiritual life of the people, either the Russians themselves or the native races with which they are in contact. must be made with many reservations.

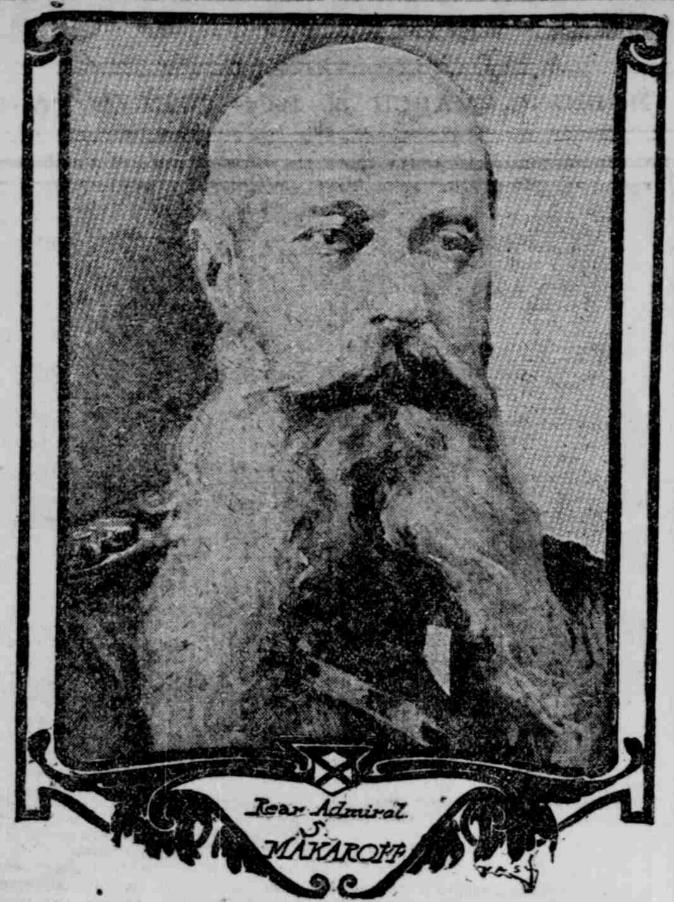

"Predictions as to the outcome of the war think it true now, however, as I have said many times before, that the Japanese navy is stronger than the Russian navy toat can be brought into action on the Pacific, and that the Japanese army which can be placed in the field and maintained for campaigning in Manchuria, Korea and eastern Siberia is stronger than the Russian army that can be brought into the same field for several months. So far as land operations are concerned, this advantage in favor of Japan has been lessening continually for two years, and it is the best evidence of the patience of Japan and its desire for peace that it did not hasten the war with Russia long ago when the Siberian Railway was a less important factor than it is now in the reinforcement and maintenance

RUSE OF JAPANESE TO CORK PORT ARTHUR

ST. PETERSBURG, March 4.-A resident from Port Arthur, having left the day before the first Japanese attack, tells an interesting story which seems to indicate that the Japanese planned to cork the harbor before firing a shot. He says that on the day of his departure a big merchantman, flying the Japanese flag, approached the entrance and in the narrowest part of the channel suddenly stopped, signaled: "I am sinking," and commenced to settle. Luckily a tug with steam up was close by and towed the Japanese vessel into a shallow part of the outer harbor. The mer-chantman was loaded with iron. Her cap-tain declared he had been caught in a storm and the pumps, which had kept the steamer afloat, broke down just as the en-trance of Port Arthur was reached. The wife of a Russian naval officer at tached to the armored cruiser Rossia, who has just arrived here from Vladivostok, described the scene there at the outbreak of hostilities. At 8 o'clock in the morning of Feb. 9 a shot was fired by the flagship and signals were hoisted, calling all seamen and others who were on shore leave to come on board. There was great excitement and enthusiasm among the people on the streets. Warships in the harbor were surrounded with ice and crowds gathered about them, watched the ships receive their war colors and cheered as the ice-breaker opened a channel. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon, headed by the Rossia and accompanied by the hurrans of the people gathered on the ice, the fleet steamed out.

Japan evidently refrained from making a special effort to prevent their passage, and it is not impossible that she calmly permitted the delivery of the contraband goods, calculating that they would prove useful to herself at a later stage of the campaign. This was in answer to a letter sent by the King, who, on hearing that Count Benckendorff intended going to St. Petersburg to bid farewell to his son, who was bound to the front with his regiment, sent for the ambassador and asked him to hand the Czar an autograph letter, in which King Edward in the most friendly terms emphasized Great Britain's complete neutrality during the war in the far East, and said he trusted the Czar would pay no attention to the press reports infimating Great Britain was not neutral, nor to any unfriendly comments of the English papers, which the King regretted.
